DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Five stories high and three bays wide, this commercial building on Baltimore Street is dressed in brick, glass and stone. The altered Beaux-Art first floor facade now carries a central display window. A metal corporate sign functions as its cornice. The window groupings stress the vertical lines of the building which are broken by the detailed cornice.

Much of the original rusticated stone street level facade remains. The entrance on the right boasts a stone surround and is capped by a cornice slab with dentil detailing. The central display window is underlined by a brick header sill. Common bond brickwork extends below the sill to the ground. A metal corporate sign divides the first and second floors.

Three vertical round-headed, slightly recessed window groupings dominate the American common bond brick upper stories. Single one-over-one industrial casement windows with interfloor banded divisions flank the major tripartite window section. Separated by muntins, the one-over-one industrial casement windows are mounted by a common fascis bundle. The interfloor detail boasts a three-section panel accented by a central medallion.

The surmounting building cornice enframes the high, gauged-brick lintels with double keystones fanning out above the window groupings. Modillions and egg and dart molding accent the cornice, which is supported by balled brackets.
